There is some interest in bird control in standing corn. Keith Harris and O. H. Tolley, Jr. called the problem to my attention this week. Corn problems from Prince Edward and Charlotte Counties, likewise, discusses the problem last Thursday on the Ciba-Gegy Tour at Hix Brothers farm.

Birds can be controlled with a chemical sold under the trade name Avitrol. It was registered in 1972 for bird control in standing corn.

Results are greatly improved when all farmers in an area treat but individual farmers can protect their fields. This material is sold through the Bureau of Sports Fisheries and Wildlife and the Virginia Department of Agriculture in order that control of use can be monitored. Results have been excellent in most places in Virginia where it has been used.

Only one kernel in one hundred is actually treated with the active toxicant. There are two reasons for this dilution rate: 1. to spread the small amount of treated bait over a wider area of the field and 2. to provide such a dilution that any one bird would likely only consume one treated grain. The one treated grain is sufficient to cause the bird that consumes it to react. And several reacting birds can frighten several thousand birds out of the "undesirable" field. The reactions are distress calls and flying about in an erractic behavior pattern by the bird eating the treating grain.

You would need ½ to 1 pound of grain per acre of corn. If it should rain within 24 hours after application the bait should be re-applied.

When making applications no bait should be placed within 50 feet of the outer edge of the fields, roadways, or waterways. This eliminates affecting non-targeted wildlife.

The cost is 7¢ per pound.

63 yearlings have been consigned to the Yearling Sale September 12 from Appomattox County. Consignors are Joe Bondurant, J. C. Caldwell, Jr., W. R. Paulette, M. B. Taylor, C. C. Ranson, and R. E. McChenny, Jr.

950 steers from all counties have been nominated. We could handle another 400 to 500. If you have some large steers or heifers, weighing 400 - 1000 pounds we would be glad to assist you in getting them sold at this special sale.

We're looking forward to the Piedmont Market Hog and Trade Show September 19 in Farmville. If you have hogs, let's see them in the show. For those that don't have hogs, it will be a good show to visit.

If you have a farm pond that tends to stay muddy you may like to try Gypson. Gypson causes fine suspended clay particles to coagulate and settle to the bottom. Apply by spreading over surface of pond at rate of 12 pounds per 1000 cubic feet of water, about 700 pounds required for ½ acre pond. There is no detrimental effect to plants, animals, fish, or drinking water.
